
TAO IS THE SOURCE

The source of all is the emptiness of Tao. From nothing emerges everything. From emptiness flows Tao. The creativity of Tao is magnificent. We see it happening all around us: from the leaves on a tree to the sparkle in a friend's eye, from the flow of the seasons to the joy of happiness—Tao creates all this for no reason.

The source of harmony lies in Tao. Outside of Tao both chaos and balance emerge.

The source of unpredictability lies in Tao. Out of Tao emerges both the hidden and the present, the obscure and the apparent. Tao is far away and very, very close.

The source of simplicity lies in Tao. It is said of Tao that it is “without self-interest.” Tao yields to everything. Tao has no preference.

Tao gains nothing. If left alone it doesn't diminish. If left unwatched it does not die out. The energy of Tao is and has always been apparent. It is in everything, it is always present.

Open yourself to Tao. Tao is the source of all.
